

- Marital transition is likely to impact on the frailty among middle aged and older people in South Korea.
- Through result of our study, it can be derived that the marital transition is a potential factors of frailty.
- Clinicians need to consider the close social environment such as marital status when diagnosing older adults and designing interventions to treat and prevent frailty.